PREFACE.

THE opportunities I have had of informing myſelf of the merits of the ſeveral dictionaries now in uſe, having made me lament that while Ainſworth's, one of the beſt books hitherto publiſhed, was but little known in ſchools, Coles', a much inferiour work in its kind, was almoſt univerſally admited; I thought I could not do a more acceptable piece of ſervice to my country, than by contriving ſome means of introducing the former as much into vogue. As this, therefore, was only to be effected by diminiſhing its bulk, which muſt of courſe diminiſh it price, the ſole objection that could be made to the former editions; I ſet about compiling an abridgement of it, which might anſwer all the purpoſes of a dictionary intended for the uſe of ſchools, without impairing ought of the intrinſick value of that admirable work. Having fixed therefore upon a plan which I thought would do, I communicated it about three years ſince to one of the moſt conſiderable of the proprietors, who received it with that attention which the caſe required. But his death happening ſoon after, and being myſelf called over to France, and from thence into Norfolk; I heard nothing further of it till about two years ago, when I was informed that there was another abridgement actually coming out by a ſet of bookſellers, who had no real property in the work. Upon this, therefore, I haſtened to town, in order to put my own deſign immediately into execution.

Having thus given the Reader ſome account of the reaſon which induced me to undertake this work, it may not be amiſs to ſay a few things of the dictionary which has lately appeared againſt it under the reſpectable name of the late reverend Mr. Young. And here we ſhall not be ſo much at a loſs what to ſay, as to confine the many obſervations which occur on that head, within the narrow limits of a preface. But theſe things having been already done to our * hands, we ſhall only remark, in general, that it is ſo far from being an † improvement upon all other preceding works of the ſame nature, that we declare it to be in our humble opinion much the worſt book yet publiſhed in its kind. For this we need only appeal to the work itſelf, but as many may not poſſibly have an opportunity of conſulting it, we ſhall here give them in a few words its real character, which is, that it is defective, ſuperfluous, and erroneous. This may poſſibly appear a paradox, we make it out in the following manner. It is defective in words which ought to have been inſerted, ſuperfluous in words which ought not, and erroneous in every reſpect. As it is not our intention, however, here to deſcend to particulars, we ſhall only refer our Readers, for the truth of the firſt part of this aſſertion, to the multitude of claſſical words left out; for the truth of the ſecond, to the number of unclaſſical words admited; and for a confirmation of the laſt, to the execution of the whole. Under this head, indeed, it may not be improper to take notice of the ſpelling, which is far from being the beſt we have ever ſeen; and therein, in particular, of the word Penn, which is ſpelt, throughout the whole of this accurate performance, with a ſingle n ‡. Much might likewiſe have been added concerning the judgement of the authour in ſuch articles as he has abridged, for which we appeal to the word ‖ Prætor; and much alſo with relation to the purity of words omited in the Latin part, for which we refer to that and the Proper names.

‡ Of greater importance ſtill is the word compliment, which is ſpelt no leſs than thrice in the ſame column with an e in the penult; and is thereby made to mean quite a different thing. Vid. blandior, &c.

‖ In Ainſworth this article runs thus. Prætor, ōris. m. [à præeundo, qu. præitor, quòd populo præiret; prætor dictus qui præiret jure & exercitu, Varr. à præeſſe, ut ſit generatim is qui præeſt, Liv.] (1) In old

Having ſaid thus much of the works of others, it is time we now come to that of our own. With regard then to the work which we have here the honour of preſenting the publick, we have only to add in brief, that if it be not ſuch as is worthy their acceptance, it has not been owing to any want of diligence. The multitude of things indeed to be attended to in it, will, no doubt, be productive of ſome errours; but theſe, we hope, are but few; and this we can ſafely aver, that no pains have been wanting, on our part, to render it as free from any as poſſible. In the rejection of words as not claſſical, we have been careful to omit none, but ſuch as we had ſufficient reaſon for: in the admiſſion of claſſical words, we have, generally ſpeaking, given none a place, but ſuch as were of undoubted authority; thoſe words alone excepted which we could find no pure Latin for; in which caſe we have been obliged to put up with ſuch as we could get. This we hope will be a ſufficient apology for many words left ſtanding in this work, which claim only the authority of a Feſtus or a Gellius; nor indeed, were the caſe otherwiſe, does it ſeem to us a ſufficient reaſon for excluding all ſuch words indiſcriminately, becauſe not mentioned by purer writers. For as many of their writings have periſhed by the iniquity of time, and as theſe are the very authours to whom we are in a great meaſure indebted for thoſe few venerable relicks of antiquity which remain: authours too who wrote in the very ages, when the language was ſpoken: it would be unreaſonable to ſuppoſe that all their words have a tincture of impurity in them, though not dignified with the authority of a Virgil, or a Cicero. Many of them too are ſo eaſily derived from the Latin, and ſo perfectly agreeable to the genius of that tongue; that we make no doubt, if they were not in uſe before, but they would have found admiſſion among writers of the Auguſtan age. Theſe were our reaſons for giving them a place in this work; but to ſhew, at the ſame time, that we were not inſenſible of the exceptionable foundation on which they ſtand, as well as to guard againſt any inconveniencies which might ariſe to boys from the indiſcriminate uſe of them; we have been all along careful to diſtinguiſh them with a dagger (†) or parallel (‖), the accuſtomary marks of unclaſſicalneſs and reprobation. Where-ever too theſe authours have intervened under the various ſenſes of a word, we have been careful to obſerve the ſame method; and where-ever a Greek derivative occured, of which a greater number perhaps will be found in this dictionary, than were thought by many to have exiſted in the Latin language; we have been as careful to diſtinguiſh it by a ſtar (*), that its origin and deſcent might not eſcape the eyes of boys. The derivation itſelf indeed we have omited, as well as thoſe of Hebrew root; becauſe this work being intended merely for the ſervice of boys in the lower claſſes, who have ſeldom any thing to do with theſe languages, we thought the bare marking ſuch as were deſcended from the former ſufficient.

In the Engliſh part we have likewiſe obſerved the ſame method, that is to ſay, to adopt no words but ſuch as were either eaſily formed in themſelves, or countenanced by good old time, after the exclufion of kings, the conſul was ſo called, as having kingly power, both for civil and military affairs. (2) Afterwards the conſuls being employed abroad in war, there was an officer conſtituted with power to judge matters of law between citizen and citizen, called prætor urbanus, whom Cicero often calleth prætor Romanus, like our lord mayor; and becauſe there was a great company of ſtrangers at Rome, another was appointed to judge caſes between them, called therefore Peregrinus, like our ſheriff of Middleſex. (3) At laſt, as more provinces came in, and cauſes increaſed, there were eight prætors made, and ſo continued till Julius Cæſar made them ten. (4) An imperator, or general. (5) At laſt it came to ſignify any governour, or chief magiſtrate. (6) A proprætor, or lieutenant-general. (7) A proconſul. In what manner we have abridged it, the Reader will here ſee.

authority. Under this head we have likewiſe added many ſenſes as annexed to a word, which were not given it * before. We have alſo inſerted not a few which were not before to be met with in this work, for which we appeal to the letter Z only: under all theſe articles, we acknowledge ourſelves not a little indebted to the celebrated Mr. Johnſon, whoſe admirable treaſure of the Engliſh language we confeſs to have uſed with freedom, and we hope with improvement.

For the ſpelling, as the Reader may poſſibly think it ſomewhat particular in ſuch words as end in ed and ing, (for inſtance, in omited and omiting) we have only this to offer in its defence, viz. that it appeared to us the trueſt; having always thought it an abſurd cuſtom in participles and derivatives from ſuch words, as have only a ſingle conſonant at the end of the primitive, to double that conſonant unneceſſarily in the derivative †. Unreaſonable, notwithſtanding, as this ſeemed, we ſhould not have adventured ſo bold an innovation, but that we were countenanced herein by a gentleman, whoſe name, if we were permited to mention it, would be thought ſufficient authority for what we have done. But though his merit neither ſtands in need of our pen, nor will his modeſty permit us to let the publick know whom we have been ſo greatly indebted to in the courſe of this work; we think it, notwithſtanding, incumbent upon us to declare, that we are under obligations to him for the reviſal of ſome of the ſheets, but more eſpecially for his aſſiſtance in drawing up the plan, upon which the preſent abridgement is formed.

With reſpect to the Proper names, we have left ſuch articles ſtanding in that part, as appeared to us neceſſary for the explanation of ſuch paſſages as occur in books put into the hands of boys, from their occuring in thoſe very books; and another thing likewiſe which we thought was to be attended to in this part, was the language in which thoſe ſtories are generally told, which, in all works of this nature, being for the moſt part rude and often obſolete, we have endeavoured to rectify as far as lay in our power. For it ſeemed to us of no ſmall importance to boys, that for the better maſtering of their own tongue, the ſtyle even of works of this nature ſhould be terſe and polite, and all antiquated forms of ſpeech baniſhed from them as far as poſſible. The want perhaps of ſufficient attention to theſe points is the reaſon why young gentlemen, after having been long at ſchool, and made a conſiderable progreſs in the Latin, are unable to expreſs themſelves with tolerable propriety in their own tongue. Divers articles too in which any thing material ſeemed to be omited, we have enlarged ‡ upon: others which were chiefly related in ‖ Latin, we have for the aſſiſtance of young beginers rendered into Engliſh; and in ſome we have omited many things which appeared to us unneceſſary, either becauſe related before under ſome preceding § article, or not immediately connected with that under which they ¶ occur.

Nor has the quantity of the ſeveral words, both in the Latin and Engliſh parts, eſcaped our obſervation. In the firſt, our aim has chiefly been to mark ſuch ſyllables only, as ſeemed to us to ſtand in need of it, from their having no rules of Grammar to direct boys in the pronunciation of them: there being, we apprehend, this difference to be obſerved betwixt a dictionary and a Gradus, viz. that whereas the latter marks all ſyllables without diſtinction, it is the buſineſs of the former to take notice of ſuch only as are ſpecified above. Of this it would be endleſs to produce examples. In the ſecond, where-ever two words have occured which are ſpelt alike, but pro-

* See Cuſtomer, Turtle, Woodman, &c.

† Indeed, as many of the words here hinted at, ought, if conſidered with reſpect to their derivation from the Latin, to be ſpelt with a double conſonant in the preſent tenſe, we ſhould readily admit the doubling of it alſo in the other tenſes and participles, were that mode of ſpelling followed; but as the cuſtom now is, even in words of this nature, to admit only one final conſonant in the preſent tenſe, we cannot think there is any ſuch difference in the pronunciation, as to render the doubling of it in the other tenſes neceſſary. It is to be obſerved, however, that we would not be underſtood here, as if we thought this method were to be followed on all occaſions. No general rule, it is ſaid, is without exceptions, and as ſuch it cannot be expected that the rule we would here beg leave to propoſe ſhould be free from them. We are ſenſible that there are many words in the Engliſh language (ſuch, for inſtance, as trapping and ſtripped) in which the omiſſion of the double conſonant would be attended with the greateſt confuſion, and therefore on all ſuch occaſions would have it inviolably preſerved.

nounced differently, such, for instance, as dĕsert and desĕrt, in this case its accent (the acute) has been constantly placed in such a manner, as to render the difference obvious to the most cursory eye. Another circumstance which we have also attended to on this occasion, was, in all such cases, to give the different significations of each word within a crotchet, that boys might be prevented thereby from mistaking one for the other.

To conclude, though in all parts, we have added, altered, and diminished, we have omited nothing which to us seemed worthy of being inserted: we have inserted nothing which to us seemed necessary to be omited, and no where made variations, but in such places as we had great reason to think they would be approved of.

The Reader, who, upon a recapitulation of the above, will remember the many things necessary to be attended to in a work of this nature, will have the goodness to excuse any errours of the press which may have crept into it; any slips of our own which may have fallen from us; or any other mistakes of what kind soever which may occur in this work; for this single reason, namely, that we are not conscious to ourselves of having been deficient in any thing, which as far as our mean abilities would permit, we thought could conduce in the least to his advantage. Nor have the proprietors been less studious, on their part, to render it as worthy the acceptance of the publick, as the adventitious ornaments of a book can make it. Our paper, it is true, has not been fabricated * for the purpose, but we presume, notwithstanding, it will be found a good one; our printers too we flatter ourselves will appear to be masters of their own business; and if there be any merit in a letter, ours is beyond all dispute the best, that has ever yet been used in a work of this size. These are the motives on which we presume to lay it before the publick, and to their candour and judgement it is most humbly submited.

Explication of the several MARKS used in this WORK.

In the first, or English and Latin part:

THE Declensions of Nouns Substantive are denoted by the figures 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, except in such as may occasion any difficulty to young scholars as to the Gender, or Genitive case singular; in which words both the Gender and Genitive case are set down.

The Conjugations of Verbs are denoted in the same manner, with the like restrictions.

In the second and third parts:

The different English significations of the Latin words are denoted by figures, as well as the Latin authorities.

In all the parts:

† Prefixed to a word denoteth it to be obsolete.

‖ Before a word denoteth it to be bad, or used only by writers of an inferiour class.

* Before a word sheweth it to be of Greek extraction.

¶ Is prefixed to phrases and idioms.

§ Denoteth the grammatical construction.

✣ Before a word sheweth it to be poetical.

= Prefixed to a word, or sentence, sheweth that two or more words in that sentence, are much of the same import.

⌘ Before a word, or sentence, sheweth that two or more words in that sentence, are used in an opposite, or different sense.

=⌘ Denote that there are words both of the same and opposite sense in the same sentence.

☞ Denoteth something remarkable as to the use and construction of a word.

¯ Over a Vowel sheweth that syllable to be long.

And therefore, Proin, proinde, ideo, idcirco. ¶ And therefore while you have time, conſider, proin tu dum eſt tempus cogita. And therefore be as courageous as the caſe requires, proinde fac tantum animum habeas, quanto opus eſt.

And yet, Tamen etſi. ¶ The conſul ſeeth, and yet this man liveth, conſul videt, hic tamen vivit. I ſuffer for my raſhneſs, and yet what raſhneſs was there in it? do pœnas temeritatis meæ, etſi quæ fuit illa temeritas? And yet they will not do that neither, neque id facient. And yet why ſhould I teach you this? quanquam te quidem quid hoc doceam? And yet all cannot be Scipio's, nec tamen omnes poſſunt eſſe Scipiones.

Note, and is omitted when the former of two verbs, coupled by it, is changed into a participle. ¶ He railed at him, and beat him, conviciis laceratum cecîdit, for conviciis laceravit & cecidit. Whom his mother conceived and bore, quem mater conceptum genuit.

Note, the Engliſh idiom and is ſometimes tranſlated by ut; as, ¶ How ſhall I defend him, and not be faulty? quomodo ita eum defendam, ut culpæ non ſim affinis? How can we go out, and not be ſeen? quomodo ita poſſumus egredi, ut non conſpiciamur?

And all, Etiam, quoque. ¶ And you and all, & tu etiam. He had loſt his faith and all, perdidiſſet fidem quoque.

And is ſometimes included in the ſupine, as, ¶ I will go and ſee, ibo viſum. Let us go and drink together, tamus compotatum.

A little more and he had been killed, parum abfuit quin interficeretur.

As [implying time of action] Dum, ut, cùm, in, ubi, super, inter, &c. ¶ As I stood at the door, dum ante ostium sto. As the money was paying down, the man happened to come in on a sudden, ut numerabatur fortè argentum, intervenit homo de improviso. As I was folding up this letter, cùm complicarem hanc epistolam. As I was going into the nursery, ubi in gynæceum ire occipio. He studieth as he is travelling, in itinere secum ipse meditatur. Had this befallen you as you were at supper, si inter cœnam hoc tibi accidisset. These things did he talk as we were at supper, hæc ille dixit super cœnam. ✣ And as he shew he looked down upon the fields, agrosque volans despectabat.

As [in comparisons, and answering to such, so, &c.] is made by Qui or qualis. ¶ Nor are we such as enemies cannot defame, neque ii sumus, quos vituperare nè inimici quidem possint. Shew yourself now to be such a one, as you have already shewn yourself before, præbe te talem hoc tempore, qualem te jam antea præbuisti.

As, in one part of a sentence answering to so in the other, is made by Atque, quemadmodum, quomodo, sicut, ita, velut, ut. ¶ So [such] shall be the end of felicity as it was before, similis erit finis boni, atque antea fuerat. If this be so full as I say, si plenum sit hoc quemadmodum dico. You have so made me consul as few have been made in this city, ita me fecistis consulem, quomodo pauci in hâc civitate facti sunt. As you said, so it fell out, sicut dixti, ita evenit. From which judgment he escaped naked as from a fire, quo ex judicio velut ex incendio nudus effugit. As that was troublesome, so this is pleasant, ut illud erat molestum, sic hoc est jucundm. Would he be so foolish as to trust me? an ille tam esset stultus ut mihi crederet?

As, in the latter clause of a sentence answering to so, or as great, much, little, soon, fast, &c. is made by Quàm, quantus, qui, or ut, with a superlative; as, ¶ Let the business be dispatched as soon, and with as little trouble, as may be, quàm primùm & quàm minimâ cum molestiâ res transigatur. As great honour, as might be, was given to the gods, diis, quantus maximus poterat, habitus est honos. I ran away as fast as I could, ego me in pedes quantùm queo conjeci. I commended you to him as diligently as I could. sic ei te commendavi, ut gravissimè, diligentissimèque potui. I shew you as much respect as can be, quâ possum veneratione maximâ te prosequor. He accosteth the man as courteously as possible, appellat hominem quàm blandissimè potest. I have sit forth the oracles as briefly as I could, exposui quàm brevissimè potui oracula.

As redoubled, with an adverb, or adjective betwixt, and the particles, it is, they be, &c. after it, is made by Quamlibet or quamvis. ¶ As rich as you are, he careth not a pin for you, non enim pili facit te quamlibet divitem. As if it were any hard matter for me to name them, as many as they are, quasi vero mihi difficile sit, quamvis multa nominatim proferre.

Sometimes it is put for howsoever, and is made by Quantuscunque or quantuluscunque. ¶ All this, as great as it is, is thine, totum hoc, quantumcunque est, tuum est. By this which I say, as little as it is, may be judged, ex eo quod dico, quantulum id cunque est, judicari potest. As wise a man as any in our city, sapiens homo cum primis nostræ civitatis.

As is sometimes put for in this regard, or respect, and then is made by Ut, quà, or tanquam. ¶ I will pursue him to death, not as a just enemy, but as a poisonous murderer, ad internecionem mihi persequendus est, non ut justus hostis, sed ut percussor veneficus. He is not valued as he is any man's son, but as he is a man, non quà filius alicujus, sed quà homo æstimatur. And commanded to speak not as a senator, but as a person accused, jussumque dicere non tanquam senatorem, sed tanquam reum.

As, answering to so or as, where equality is intimated, or comparison of one thing with another, is made by Æquè ac, æquè atque, æquè quàm; quàm; tam, quàm; non, haud, or nihilo minùs quàm. ¶ What mighty advantage would there be in proſperity, without a man had ſome body to rejoice at it as much as himſelf? Quis eſſet tantus fructus in proſperis rebus, niſi haberes qui illis, æquè ac tu ipſe, gauderet? Theſe benefits are not to be accounted ſo great, as thoſe, which, hæc beneficia æquè magna non ſunt habenda, atque ea, quæ. They can ſee as well by night as by day, noctibus æquè quàm die cernunt. He is afraid of harm as much as any of you, non minùs quàm veſtrûm quivis formidat malum. I thought he made as great account of her as of himſelf, quam ego intellexi haud minùs quàm ſeipſum magni facere. He is in as great miſery, as he that, nihilo minùs in miſeriâ eſt quam ille qui.

As, ſignifying accordingly, or proportionably as, is made by Ut, uti, ſicut, ita ut, pro, prout, pro eo ac, pro eo atque, perinde atque, proinde, proinde ac, utcunque, &c. ¶ As you deſerve, ut meruiſti. As you ſay, uti dicis. I fled to his houſe as to an altar, ſicut in aram confugi in hujus domum. I loved him as my own, amavi pro meo. As every one pleaſeth, prout cuique libido eſt. As I ought, pro eo ut debui. It muſt be accounted of as done by no right, pro eo habendum eſt atque ſi nullo jure factum eſſet. As I ſhall tell you, perinde ut dicam. He did not ſeem to apprehend it, as I had thought, non perinde atque ego putâram, arripere viſus eſt. He is not hated as he deſerveth, quem nequaquam, perinde ac dignus eſt, oderunt homines. As occaſion ſhall be, pro re natâ. As there ſhall be need of ſpeaking, utcunque opus fuerit verbis.

As [which] Quod, id quod. ¶ She did as her mother bid her, Mater quod ſuaſit ſua fecit. But if our country do affect us, as it ſhould very much, at ſi nos, id quod maximè debet, noſtra patria dilexit.

As is ſometimes uſed for if. ¶ As you love me, Si me ames. As I live, ſi vivo.

As ſure as can be, Quàm certiſſimè.

As for, or as to, De, quatenus, quantùm, quod ad, ad. ¶ As to the keeping our liberty I agree with you, de libertate retinendâ tibi aſſentior. As for what he ſpake of religion, quatenus de religione dicebat. As far as I could apprehend, quantùm aſſequi potui. As for Pomponius, quod ad Pomponium. I will do that which, as to the ſeverity of it, ſhall be more mild, and, as to the common ſafety, more profitable, faciam id, quod eſt ad ſeveritatem lenius, ad communem ſalutem utilius.

As being, Ut, utpote, quippe, ſcilicet. ¶ As being one to whom very great ſorrow came by his death, ut qui ſummum mœrorem ex ejus morte percepturus eſſet. A people that may be numbred as being ſmall, populus numerabilis, utpote parvus. Democritus, as being a learned man, thinketh the ſun to be of a great compaſs, ſol Democrito magnus videtur, quippe homini erudito. I, as being a very wiſe man, preſently underſtood, ego, ſcilicet homo prudentiſſimus, ſtatim intellexi.

As far as, Quà, quantùm, quoad, uſque, uſque ad, uſque eo. ¶ As far as one could ſee, quà viſus erat. As far as is in my power, quantùm ſitum eſt in nobis. As far as poſſible, quoad ejus fieri poteſt. As far as Rome, Romam uſque. As far as the works, uſque ad molem. As far as ſhall be needful, uſque eo quo opus erit.

As if, as though, Quaſi, perinde quaſi, perinde ac ſi, tanquam, ut ſi, tanquam qui, tanquam ſi, non ſecus ac ſi, juxta ac ſi, ita ut ſi. ¶ As if his life lay at ſtake, quaſi vitæ diſcrimen agatur. You require that we ſhould confirm that as though it were done by our order, poſtulas ut id, perinde quaſi factum ſit noſtro judicio, confirmemus. They trembled, as if they had been ſurprized by an ambuſh, perinde, ac ſi inſidiis circumventi fuiſſent, trepidârunt. She fought as if ſhe had no mind to conquer, ita pugnabat tanquam quæ vincere nollet. That they ſhould ſalute him as though he were a conſul, ut iſtum, tanquam ſi eſſet conſul, ſalutarent. This is all one as if I ſhould ſay, hoc perinde eſt tanquam ſi ego dicam. As if you were my own brother, non ſecus ac ſi frater meus eſſes. As if he had been my own brother, juxta ac ſi meus frater eſſet. As though he had known nothing of the matter, ita ut ſi rem iſtam non nôſſet. He maketh as though he had not been willing, diſſimulat ſe voluiſſe.

As it were, Ut, ceu, quaſi, tanquam.

As long as, Quamdiu, tamdiu, tantiſper dum, quoad, uſquedum, dum. ¶ You ſhall learn as long as you will, diſces quamdiu voles. He lived in the city as long as he could conveniently, vixit tamdiu quam licuit in civitate beatè vivere. As long as you oblige him, dum huic obſequare. I muſt play leaſt in ſight as long as the matter is undecided, latendum eſt tantiſper dum negotium non confectum fuerit. Do not forfear writing to me, as long as you can conveniently do it, quoad ejus facere poteris, nè intermittas ſcribere ad me. As long as they live, uſque dum vivunt. I gave as long as I had it, dedi dum fuit.

As big as, as bad as, Inſtar. ¶ As big as a book, inſtar voluminis. They think it as bad as death, inſtar mortis putant.

As many as, Tot, totidem, quotquot, quodcunque, quotcunque, ¶ As many years as he has lived, tot annos quot habet. There are as many changes of voices as of minds, vocis mutationes totidem ſunt quot animorum. As many as there be, quotquot erunt. As many ſoldiers as you can get together, quodcunque militum contrahere poteritis. Twice as many as the number of ſervants requireth, duplicia quàm numerus ſervorum exigit.

As much, Tantùm. ¶ Though I loſe as much more, etiamſi alterum tantum perdendum ſit. Who ought to have enjoyed theſe things as much or more, quem pariter uti his decuit, aut etiam ampliùs. Add as much as you will thereto, it will keep to its kind, quamtumcunque eò addideris, in ſuo genere manebit. They are as much to blame, ſimili ſunt in culpâ, tam ſunt in vitio. As much as lay in me, quod quidem in me fuit. We have done as much as we promiſed and undertook, ſatisfactum eſt promiſſo noſtro ac accepto. I will do as much for you, reddam vicem, reddetur opera. Which is as much as any plaintiff can deſire, quod eſt accuſatori maximè optandum. He made as much account of the good-will of his own townſmen, as of his own credit, voluntatem municipum tantidem, quanti fidem ſuam fecit.

As much as ever, Ut cùm maximè, quantus maximè. ¶ The houſe is as much celebrated as ever, domus celebratur ita ut cùm maximè. I will ſpeak with as much brevity as ever I can, dicam quantâ maximè brevitate potero.

As often as, Quotieſcunque, toties quoties. ¶ As often as I ſpeak, quotieſcunque dico. As often as it is commanded, toties quoties præcipitur.

As ſoon as, Ubi, cùm, cùm primùm, ut, ſimul ac, ſimul ut, atque. ¶ As ſoon as ever, Ubi primùm, ut primùm, cum primùm, ſimul ac primùm, ſtatim ut.

As well as, ut, tam quàm, æquè ac. ¶ I will bear it as well as I can, ut potero feram. I love thee as well as myſelf, tam te diligo quàm meipſum. If they could endure our vices as well as our commands, ſi tam vitia noſtra quàm imperia ferre poſſent. As well as I, æquè mecum, juxta mecum, mecum pariter. They can ſee as well by night as by day, noctibus æquè quàm die cernunt. He thinketh no body can do as well as himſelf, nihil, niſi quod ipſe facit, rectum putat.
